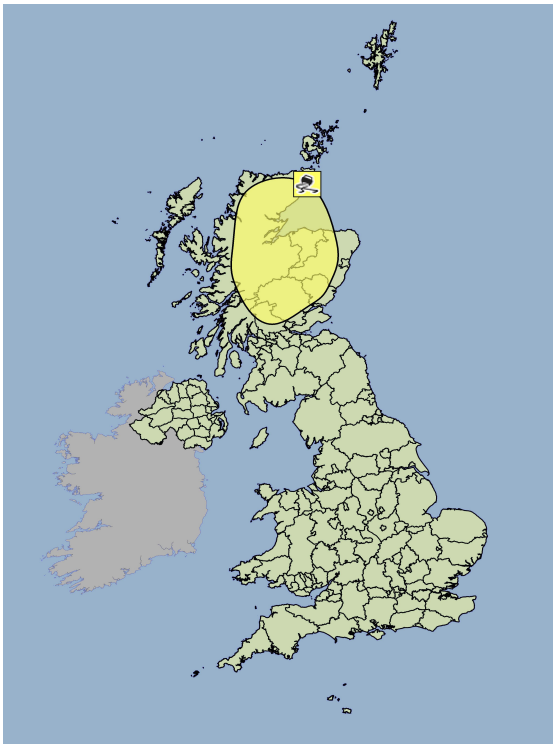
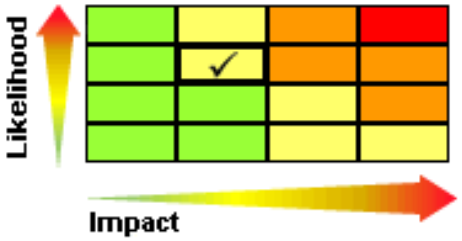
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Rain clearing to scattered showers later on Monday evening and during Monday night will allow road temperatures to fall below freezing leading to icy stretches on untreated surfaces. Showers could also lead to localised wash-off where roads have been treated.

The showers, falling mainly across the north and west, will turn increasingly to snow over the higher routes, and perhaps to lower levels in the north, giving accumulations of 1-3 cm locally.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 02:00 on Tue, 31st Mar 2015 until 10:00 on Tue, 31st Mar 2015

Clearer skies and wintry showers developing later on Monday evening and during Monday night will allow road temperatures to fall below zero, leading to icy stretches on untreated surfaces.

The public should be aware of the potential for hazardous driving conditions, though the risk will decrease quickly on Tuesday morning as temperatures rise again.
